Gadshill. Here Charles Dickens resided from 1856 until his death in 1870. In one of his letters he says, "When I was a small boy down in these parts I thought it the most beautiful house ever seen." It is a comfortable old-fashioned house, built by one Stevens, about 1775, who began life as an ostler at an inn, married the landlord's widow, became a brewer, and finally Mayor of Rochester.
